Excerpt: . . . is at Gods service, for it is from Him. Every moment of my life, every thought of my brain, every garment of my body, every coin in my pocket, all my circumstances, my time, my past, my present, my future, my hopes, my fears, my discipline, my occupation, are fcoly to the Lord. Everything which is devoted to the Lord is most holy. This sort of holiness is not attainable by any amount of effort to work up to it, but by surrender, by receiving of His fulness by faith, and living in the consciousness that Christ really lives in the soul according to the measure of the gift of Christ. This may not be the ordinary conception of holiness, and it was not the conception which I possessed at first, seeing that I clung to the idea that it was something to which I was to attain by carefulness of effort and self-determination to be completely correct. I was as yet clinging to the I, the mine, and the me instead of desiring that Christ should make the shrine of my being most holy by filling it with His presence and power, and by living His life within me. And not only desiring this, but recognising the eternal fact that there can be no true life or holiness apart from Christ. There can be nothing holier than this holy life of the true Son. A man is holy when he so realises union...
