Excerpt: . . . 8 I C H A P T E R 2 September 11, 2001, drastically changed the strategic thinking of the Department of Defense, while S and T approaches have remained stuck in the 1980s. It is of immense importance that DODs current proactive approach to strategies, plans, and programs be accompanied by a proactive technology enterprise that is refocused to address the current strategic environment and its compelling new challenges. The Joint Capabilities Integration Development System (JCIDS) was created to replace the previous service-specific requirements-generation system, which was widely seen as having created redundancies in capabilities and failed to meet the combined needs of the combatant commanders who actually employ the capabilities provided by the 2 services, Special Operations Command, and the defense agencies. As the JCIDS process is struggling to evolve into an effective system, the current strategic technology planning process is still criticized as simply compiling a list of service technology programs and...
